APTA Names First Private Practice to Offer APTA-Accredited, Postgrad Training Program in Geriatrics

The American Physical Therapy Association (APTA) recently accredited Fox Rehabilitation, Cherry Hill, NJ, to offer a new, postgraduate residency training program in geriatrics. Fox Rehabilitation is the only private physical therapy practice in the United States to receive this prestigious designation.

The mission of the program is to develop physical therapy professionals to be expert clinicians and national leaders in geriatrics. "I want geriatric physical therapy practice to gain the momentum and recognition that orthopedic and sports physical therapy practice has done in the past," said Tim Fox, PT, DPT, GCS, CCI, CEO of Fox Rehabilitation.

Participants will learn from Temple University experts on balance and cardiopulmonary disorders and visit the university's Virtual Environment and Postural Orientation Laboratory. They will also spend time with Thomas Jefferson University faculty in neurology and orthopedics, and explore the university's Human Performance Laboratory and the Dissection Lab. The program lasts 12 to 15 months, depending on each clinician's prior experience.

Fox Rehabilitation also partnered with Allied Orthotics & Prosthetics, Mount Laurel, NJ, Wound Healing Solutions, Barrington, NJ, and Mid-Atlantic Medical to provide varied and interdisciplinary learning including such fields as orthotics, prosthetics, wound care, and advanced seating and positioning.

"As the first private practice to achieve this distinction in geriatric physical therapy, Fox Rehabilitation has demonstrated their commitment to promote a high level of service to their patients and to help advance the practice of physical therapy," said J. Scott Straker, PT, MS, SCS, ATC, of the APTA.

Applications for the residency will be accepted year round. More information about the program and how to apply is available online.
